'... the things we make have one supreme quality — they live longer than us. We perish, they survive; we have one life, they have many lives, and in each life they can mean different things.'

— NEIL MACGREGOR, DIRECTOR OF THE BRITISH MUSEUM, TALKING ABOUT THE CYRUS CYLINDER AT TED TALKS

object of art

Writer makes objects not meaning.
His material is the only substance between us and him; his form, only a pause; his colour, the remains of change; his size, only contrast, and we have only ourselves to find proportion.

Like the patina of raindrops that stain Rodin's bronze, we find time vitrified in Writer's objects — having acted upon clay, presenting proof than pretty.
They look old. Their gnarled bodies are heavily marked; having secret places of clotted residue — as if carrying some stolen legacy, bleeding away ceaselessly before our eyes.

... I wanted to write about it all. Everything that happens in a moment. The way the flowers looked when you carried them in your arms. This towel, how it smells, how it feels, this thread. All our feelings, yours and mine. The history of it, who we once were. Everything in the world. Everything all mixed up, like it's all mixed up now. We want everything, don't we?

— RICHARD BROWN IN 'THE HOURS'
BY MICHAEL CUNNINGHAM

I might have found Adil Writer's hidden subject, this 'time'. Like a harlequin trickster, he treats time as if it were a sprinkle of ground sugar on crème Brûlée. As it settles, time acts for Writer through memory, an aftertaste — memory that makes up the identity of his architecture. He presents us with one odd creature after another — old souls, at once playful and profound; incidental and infuriating in their silence. He steals a moment and holds it captive in physical form. Sometimes, I feel like letting one drop to the floor, if only to see what might be released from it breaking.

THICK PLATTERS MADE BY CHUCKING THE REMAINS OF THE DAY, ALL INTO A MIX OF IMPURE CLAY — QUARTZ, FELDSPAR, SILICA CRACKLING AWAY TILL DAWN IN AN 'ANAGAMA' OR CAVE KILN, TRADITIONALLY CONSTRUCTED AS A SLOPING TUNNEL OF FIRE INTO THE HILL-SIDE.

Among his creatures, is one that he calls 'treasure box'. He makes them everywhere. They are two halves of a whole, holding a sphere within.

Some are born together in shapes of the other's presence. The gesture of Writer's repetition is not unlike his use of scale in a single object. The singular hollow of a treasure box exists in relation to the colossal association of our collective 'precious', as we open each box and match them shut, wondering what we might have found.

TREASURE BOXES IN UNIDENTICAL REPEATS OF NINE — WRITER'S NAVAGRAHA SERIES BASED ON THE INDIAN COSMOLOGY OF PLANETARY POSITIONS. THIS ONE, A BIT OF A TRANS-CONTINENTAL EXPRESSION, IS MADE IN TWO CLAYS FROM AUSTRALIA AND CHINA: HIS 'FAROHAR IMPRESSION, REMEMBERING PERSIAN PASTLIVES.

As if to confound us further, Writer is constantly scratching his surfaces with what might appear to be clues in our chase for meaning. You soon develop a suspicion though, that it's likely to lead you nowhere; that it's some momentary response to the object shifting states in its elemental business.

He is always strongly stated and seldom intelligible, with his incisions on clay or his smears on canvas. What reaches us is the emotional energy of when he was upon them. As in his Shodo paintings, the strokes and formations on canvas appear to be only one of the multiple, splintered directions they could have taken.

The complex map of gritty colour and texture, its dips and deposits, is only worth the imagination of the many parallel states in which they might exist. These surfaces, their kinetic arrangements are the picture of possibility, rather akin to Writer's own road from architecture to ceramics.

Out of the paths of the morning star they came -
The sun-eyed children of a marvellous dawn -
The messengers of the Incommunicable,
The architects of immortality.

'SHODO 1/2/3', ACRYLIC ON CANVAS, 24" HT, AUROVILLE

Writer's training as an architect is well-exposed. He refuses to hang his clay-painted canvases on the wall in frames. Instead, he devises formations to wrap his canvases on. He wants us to feel their concrete presence.

For most of its history, architecture sought to resist time, to tell stories that transcend its gravity, using materials that would hold up against the ravages of history. Writer, now leaves time be, in his objects. In the touch of its contour and crevice, resides its voice — epic tales held within little details.

When invited alongside an impressive list of artists to contribute to the 'bucket show' Writer is the only one to make multiple buckets. Why duplicate an orange? Are there not enough to go around? But in asking the question, in confronting its prosaicness, he makes us make meaning. How does sculpture relate to its origin in nature? How do multiples in turn relate to the original in sculpture? In Writer's world even the common balti has poetic possibility.

It is the juxtaposition that is both familiar and strange and therein lies his mischief in nudging us to read by the object — big and small, grand and mundane — as a narrative for sculpture, imagination, and the tenuous fragility of our own momentary and momentous existence.

13. [LEFT] Inspired by Ray Meeker's fire-stabilised mud house technology, Writer builds these domes or stacks as he calls them, only to light them afire, to reach temperature as blue turns to twilight, leaving behind toasty remains by morning for habitation or memory's sake.
